三、閱讀測驗：(33-48 題，每題 2 分，共 32%)

(33-35)

Robert Brown is good at playing the piano. Many people enjoy listening to him play beautiful music.

In 2003, Robert Brown visited Elephants World with his family. Most of the elephants there were old and sick. The look in their eyes made Robert sad.

After Robert came back home, he couldn't forget the elephants. He wanted to do something for them. Then he came up with an idea: Why not play the piano for the elephants?

Then, Robert called Elephants World and told them his idea. They gave their consent, so Robert and his friends moved his piano to Elephants World. From that day on, he played Beethoven for the elephants three days a week.

Do the elephants there love his music? Does the music work for them?

Wayne:	This is Wayne's talk show. We have Robert Brown with us tonight. Please tell us about the elephants in Elephants World.
Robert:	Most of the elephants there have a sad story behind them. They need a lot of care and love, so I play the piano for them.
Wayne:	Do they love the music?
Robert:	Yes, they do. When I play, they come up and listen. They look happy.
Wayne:	How wonderful!
Robert:	Yes, it is....

Read this.

About 3,260 years ago, Troy and Sparta began to fight with each other after the Trojan prince, Paris, asked Helen, Queen of Sparta, to leave her husband, Menelaus, and sailed back to Troy with him. The angry Menelaus found out and set off with 1,000 ships holding 50,000 people of Sparta to Troy. The war went on for years; Troy still stayed safe.

One day, a few soldiers of Sparta brought a big wooden horse, and most other soldiers sailed away, with only some stayed near Troy. They climbed inside the horse. One soldier, Sinon, pretended to be angry with his country people, saying that they left him alone. He told the Trojans that this horse was safe and would bring good luck to Trojans. They were happy and dragged the house full of foods into Troy. That night, when the Trojans were sleeping, Sinon let the soldiers of Sparta out from the horse, opened the gate, and they took over the city.

So, now when people using computers say it's a Trojan horse, that means it will hurt your computer and make it sick. No good, is it?

It was a sunny but cold afternoon. I was sitting in a café working on my news story. Having worked for an hour, I looked up from notebook screen and saw an old woman sitting on the sidewalk across from me, with a bowl in front of her. In thin clothes, she held her own body tight, trying to keep the cold out. A group of tourists walked by, talking and laughing loudly. No one seemed to see the woman.

Then I noticed a young man sitting outside of a café across from my café. He was watching the screen, too. At that moment, another group of tourists were coming along the street. Seeing them, the young man stood up, went quickly to the woman, dropped some coins into the woman's bowl right before the tourists arrived, and walked away. Many of the tourists followed suit. Soon the bowl was filled with coins. Seeing the smile on the woman's face, I suddenly felt very warm.

(Mark is visiting Helen at her house.)

Helen: Hi, Mark. Come on in.

Mark: Thanks. Hey, why are there so many baskets on the table?

Helen: I'm going to put Christmas gifts in them for some families in need.

Mark: It's sweet of you to do so. Where did you get this idea?

Helen: From my parents. Their act of kindness has warmed many people's heart at Christmas time.

Mark: Tell me more about the good deeds your parents have done.

Helen: OK. They used to run a secondhand bookstore. However, they didn't make a lot of money. It was because they often donated books and money to school libraries that were short of books.

Mark: They really had a big heart.

Helen: You can say that again.

Mark: A parent's example is the most powerful teacher of all. You should be proud of them.

Helen: Yes, they have taught us children a lot of things. I remember one Christmas, they asked us children each to give a toy away, and I chose a doll whose left arm was broken.

Mark: Oh, were they mad at you?

Helen: No, they just told me that true giving was sharing something I really loved or important, not what I didn't need any more.

Mark: Then, did you change your mind?

Helen: Yes, I replaced the doll with a music box, which I loved dearly.

Mark: Great for you!

Helen: Yes, it was one of my happiest moments in my life.

Katie 	Students in Taiwan go to school at 7:30 a.m. Do schools start too early in the morning? I want to know whether you guys think that schools should start later or not.
Frank 	Teenagers usually stay up studying and go to bed at 1 or 2 a.m. If schools start later, it will be helpful for teenagers to get more sleep.
Amy 	I like to start school early because we can go home early. If my school decides to change the starting time, that means we have less time for after-school activities.
Patrick 	Delaying school starting times will raise some problems. The traffic around schools will get worse because many people drive to work at that time, too. Besides, some families don't live near the school, so parents need to drive their kids to school on their way to work. Not every parent has time to do that.
Elva 	I don't think starting school early is a good idea. Studies show that enough sleep leads to better school grades. Teenagers need eight to ten hours of sleep every day, but I think few of them are able to do that. So, it's not surprising to see the students without enough sleep doze off in class because they are too tired.
