A platypus is a strange-looking animal and we can find it in Australia. It is about the same size as a house cat. People call it “duck-billed platypus” because its mouth looks like a duck’s mouth. Besides its mouth, its feet are like a duck’s feet, too.

Platypuses live near rivers and streams. Though they can live on land, they spend most of their time in the water. At night, they become very active. They eat bugs, shrimps, small frogs, and fish. When they are looking for food underwater, they close their eyes, ears, and even noses. Their mouths help them find their ways and feel the things around them.

Does reading, watching TV, or using smartphones in the dark really hurt your eyes? Many people think so and tell their children to stay in a place with enough light when reading, watching TV, or using smartphones, or it may lead to weak eyes.

But most eye doctors think reading in the dark won't bring lasting hurt to our eyes. Just like the muscles in our bodies, the eye muscles may get tired when they work too much. Reading in low light won't hurt our eyes, but it does make eyes get tired easily. Having enough light is important. However, after some rest, our eyes would be fine.

Now, you spend more and more time looking at the computer screen or the smartphone. Try the 20 / 20 / 20 rule — every 20 minutes, take a 20-second break and look at something 20 feet away. And remember to blink because blinking can wet your eyes. Doing some eye exercise is also helpful. Move your pupils from one side to the other side or in a circle way slowly and carefully. Massaging the muscles around your eyes would help, too.
