The word millennial is used to describe people born from 1981 to 1996. In the US, they are known for being sociable and fashionable. They spend a lot of time outside as well. However, not all of them are like this. Some millennials share more in common with their grandpas or grandmas than others their age. People call them “grandmillennials.”

One reason for this is that their style is old-fashioned. If you visited a grandmillennial, you may think they are living with their grandpas or grandmas. Their clothes, personal objects, and homes make them look like they belong in the past. Unlike other millennials, they don't show off modern objects like big TVs and computer.

Grandmillennials like to have peace and quiet. They dress in comfortable clothing, want to be alone, and spend most of their time at home. They seldom go on social media, either. For them, it's more important to have a few close friends than many followers on the Internet.

As millennials get older, more of them are turning into grandmillennials. What's funny is that some of them will actually be grandpas or grandmas pretty soon!

Does a person who gets very sick have the right to decide how and when to end his life?

In most countries, euthanasia is not legal. Some people believe that our life is given by God, and only God can decide when it should end. Others worry that people who don't really want to die might be killed if euthanasia is made legal. Still others think that life is important, and that no matter how sick one is, there is always hope to get better if he keeps living. In fact, most doctors do not want to kill their patients because their job is to save lives.

Although many countries say no to euthanasia, more and more people think that it is a way to respect life. Take David Goodall for example. In 2018, the 104-year-old Australian flew to Switzerland, where euthanasia is legal, to end his own life. He said that he didn't enjoy his life anymore. He was happy that he could say goodbye to his family and friends before he died.

Euthanasia is controversial. A study taken in the United States shows that about 46% of Americans agree that euthanasia should be made legal, and 41% of Americans don't agree with it.

- (C) David Goodall didn't die in his own country.
- (D) One third of Americas think euthanasia should not be made legal.
