三、閱讀測驗（29～43 題，每題 2 分，共 30%）

(29-30)

Many people in Taiwan drink tea. Some like black tea, some like oolong tea, and some like green tea. Tea is a very popular drink not only in Taiwan but also around the world.

Although many people love tea, they don't drink it the same way. In Japan, people usually drink it without sugar, but in Turkey or Indonesia, they love lots of sugar in their tea. In England, there are two ways to drink tea: One is to add milk and sugar, and the other is to use lemon instead of milk. People in Tibet have a special way of drinking tea: They add milk, salt, and butter. The drink is like a bowl of soup; it is good for people in a cold place like Tibet.

Back home in Taiwan, many young people enjoy tapioca balls in their tea. This is the famous Taiwanese "bubble tea." The drink has milk, sugar, and tapioca. People around the world drink tea in different ways, but their love for tea is just the same.

📖 although 雖然 instead of 而不是

29. These people don't put sugar in their tea. Where might(可能) they come from?
(A) Taiwan. (B) England. (C) Indonesia. (D) Japan.
30. How do people in England enjoy their tea?
(A) With only sugar. (B) With no sugar at all.
(C) With milk or lemon and some sugar. (D) With some butter and milk.

Mary: Mr. Lin asked our class an interesting question today, "Should schools ban cellphones?"

What do you think?

Jason: In my opinion, students are not allowed to use their phones at school.

Mary: Do you mean just during class, or for the whole school day?

Jason: I think the whole day. Students should hand over their phones in the morning and only get them back when they go home.

Mary: Why?

Jason: I think they'll be able to focus better during lessons. They'll also interact more face to face during breaks.

Mary: But, what if they need to get hold of their parents?

Jason: Then they have to get special permission. If it's really important, teachers can send a message, or make a call for them.

Mary: Isn't it better to treat students more like grown-ups? After all, they should learn to control themselves. Then real grown-ups won't need to watch them every minute of the day.

Jason: Well, in a perfect world everyone would control themselves. But, I think it's easy for them to play games or check social media, like Facebook or Instagram!

Mary: I see what you mean. I guess it's not an easy call to make!
